

Tuesday 12 May Day 44 of the garden journal

12/05/2020

Whole blooms ripped off in yesterday's gale. When the wind blows down the North Sea across the marsh and into our garden we may as well be in Iceland. At least there we'd have hot springs.

Thanks for the responses to Brenda's request for weed identification.

It looks like Pratia pendunculate, or creeping blue star. Mike Marsh

I looked in my wild flower book... don't know from your pic what the leaves are like. There is common hepatica - small pale blue flowers; or germander speedwell - pale blue; or common wood sorrel - white flowers. All seem to spread. Maybe Google those 3. Carol Gleeson

I think this might be a type of Brunnera. So pretty, it almost makes me wish I had a lawn to grow it in too. (I only have gravel and slate). Vivien Ford

Yes, it is definitely pratia pendiculata. Brenda Kirkham
